Travel Nursing Packing Tips

You've recently landed a new travel nursing assignment, and you're ready to hit the road to your new destination. But, have you ever wonder what to pack for your next assignment? Here are some travel nursing packing tips that can help prepare for your next travel destination.

1. Each travel nursing agencies handles housing differently. Inquire exactly what your housing accommodations will include. If you're staying at a hotel or Extended Stay of America, your accommodation will likely include basic amenities such bed, nightstand, dresser, etc. Most hotels will have a laundry facility onsite while some will not. Some Extended Stay will have a small kitchen with a stove, refrigerator, microwave, and dining table. If you are staying in a company-provided housing, determine whether your housing will be fully furnished or unfurnished.
2. Determine the duration of your travel assignment before packing. Many assignments can vary in length – 13 weeks is the most common.
3. Check the weather of that location and potential activities before packing. Are you traveling during summer or winter? Are you going to the beaches or hiking in the nearby trails? Knowing the location and activities that you would like to do will help you determine which items is suited for the weather condition and activity.
4. Make a list of what you regularly use to help you prioritize your most important items. As a result, you will be packing light rather than packing up everything you own. Packing large makes traveling from one place to another difficult. Keep packing to a minimum and bring the essentials. Use compression bags or use travel organizer bags to save space.
5. Keep digital copies of your documents such as driver's license, social security card, car insurance, travel documents, etc. on your phone or laptop in case you may need them for any reason. You can securely store these copied documents by using a cloud storage (e.g. Dropbox) password-protected folder.
